Are you working on a dissertation or scholarly practice project? Have you planned how you'll address any copyright concerns you might encounter? Do you know how to seek permission to use copyrighted materials?

Copyright is a difficult issue to navigate and there are a lot of technical and legal terms that can be confusing. It can be challenging to know whether you need permission before using resources (e.g., figures, tables, research instruments) in your own work. We have a guide that can help! Our Copyright and Permissions guide can help you get started with the basics of copyright. In particular:

- Our Copyright FAQs and Permissions FAQs address many of the common questions about copyright and permission and provide information about copyright considerations for your thesis or SPP. They also provide definitions and explanations for concepts like "fair use," "public domain," and more. Don't miss the section on how to request permission!
- The APA Guidelines section explains what to do if you're reproducing or adapting a figure or table from a copyrighted work. There's a particular way to cite the source of a reprinted figure or table and you'll need to include a copyright attribution statement as well. In addition to this section in our guide, see Sections 12.14-12.18 in the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association, 7th edition for more information about APA guidelines for copyright and permission.

Please feel free to reach out to the library if you have any questions. You can e-mail us at reference@regiscollege.edu or schedule an appointment using this Research Consultation Request form. Our updated library hours can be found on the library's website.

Each month we share a tip from one of your peers who have had success with managing their time. The tip for this edition of GradWire comes from MSW student Cassandra Colon who writes:

“Get a planner,” suggests Cassandra. “That has allowed me to plan and space out the assignments weekly and visually view what is due at a glance. I also print the syllabus and transcribe the weekly reading into the planner as well.”

It’s a plan. Thanks, Cassandra. Now, it’s your turn to share your sage wisdom. If you have a tip you’d like to share in an upcoming issue of GradWire, please submit it here.
